Four Seasons of Kurihara

Experience the allure of Kurihara,
a peaceful town with abundant nature

Local gourmet

Kurikoma Koei Iwana-don

In the Koei district of Kurikoma, five restaurants sell the "Kurikoma Koei Iwana-don." This is a bowl of rice topped with char from the streams of Mt. Kurikoma, prepared and seasoned differently by each shop.

Japanese yams

The Japanese yam is a wild species of yam indigenous to Japan. The Japanese yams of the Hanayama district are grown utilizing the cool climate and natural environment that is similar to where they grow in the wild, and reputed to be sweet, flavorful, and fragrant. "Mugitoromeshi," featuring this yam grated with barley rice, is exquisite.

Hanayama soba

The difference in temperatures between night and day in the foothills of Mt. Kurikoma make the locally grown soba (buckwheat) exceptionally delicious. In every area of Kurihara you can enjoy fragrant soba dishes. At the "Shin-soba Festival" you can enjoy eating three types of fresh soba: fresh ground, fresh kneaded, and fresh boiled.

Gelato, sherbet

Enjoy gelato and sherbet made from local seasonal fruits and vegetables. Available flavors change with the season. Taste the seasonal flavors of Kurihara!

Shrimp "Mochi"

This is a well-known household dish from Kurihara. Mochi dishes have been traditional for New Year's and other feasts since long ago. Boiled freshwater shrimp packed into white mochi to form "shrimp mochi," one of the distinctive mochi dishes of Kurihara.

Local sake

The breweries here boast long histories here where excellent local sake is brewed from various types of delicious sake rice grown in Kurihara. Water from the clear streams of the Kurikoma mountain range are used to make the sake, where fans will find an array of exquisite selections.

Kampo Wagyu

This is a completely new type of Japanese beef in which 14 types of herbs are blended to make feed mixed with Chinese herbs. The melting point is low at about 23.9 degrees, so you can enjoy the texture of this soft beef melting in your mouth.

Hiking on Mt. Kurikoma

Mt. Kurikoma, which is an easy mountain to hike even for beginners, officially opens to summer hikers on the 3rd Sunday in May, when there is still snow. Hikers can enjoy alpine flora during June and July, and beautiful fall colors at the end of September.

What is the Kurikoma Sanroku Geopark?

A story of coexistence with natural disasters and this vast fertile land.

In 2008, there was an inland earthquake in Iwate and Miyagi. This earthquake caused various destruction along the ground from the peak of the Kurikoma volcano all the way to the base. This has occurred repeatedly since ancient times. With the movement of the earth the shape of the land changes perpetually, and we were able to witness one of those moments.

It was certified as a Geopark in 2015! You can really feel how amazing nature is.

Topography around the mountain peak

Step into a colorful natural environment with snowy gorges eroded into the mountainside, clusters of thousand year old Thuja Standishii trees that grew on firm plateaus, and more.

Landslide area at the base of the volcano

This area, including an old hiking trailhead, was severely affected by the Miyagi inland earthquake in 2008, but now the area is rich in beautiful scenery again.

The three "Hasama" Rivers lowland area (Hasama Sansen)

The three Hasama Rivers flow from Mt. Kurikoma. Learn about the lives of the people that lived here and their struggles to cultivate rice and deal with floods.

A geopark guide will show you around.

There are transitions in the dynamic landscape, beautiful natural views, historical mines and roads, and cultural heritage sites. The guide will show you around the various geological sites in the Kurikoma Sanroku Geopark. (Guide fee: 2,000 yen per hour)

The word Geopark was born of a combination of the words "geo," meaning relating to the Earth, and "park." The goal of the park is to allow many visitors to come and enjoy the park while preserving the precious geological treasures, natural landscapes, history, and culture of the area. As Kurikoma Sanroku Geopark guides, we'll show you around while explaining everything in any easy-to-understand manner.

Kurikoma Sanroku Geopark Guide

Katsuhiro Abe

Kurikoma Sanroku Geopark is spreading the word throughout the country about its restoration since the 2008 inland earthquake in Iwate and Miyagi.
